Rowan: Black History Month offers important opportunities

BY NAOMI KAMIJO

Rochelle Rowan, director of minority student programs, is encouraging students to take advantage of the campus activities commemorating Black History Month to educate themselves more about other people.

"I want Wartburg students to take advantage of the opportunities that exist to broaden their knowledge about other people in class and in the community," she said.

Rowan has worked in Minority Student Programs at Wartburg for four years. The program provides academic support mainly to U.S. minorities such as African Americans, Native Indians and Hispanics. It also advises the Cultural Awareness Center.

African Americans constitute 12 percent of the American population and are the biggest minority in the United States. Rowan said the present situation for blacks has two perspectives.

"Blacks are getting opportunities, but a lot of problems such as racism still exist," she said.

Many blacks farming in the south or living in big city slums still suffer extreme poverty, she said. Poverty is the one of the biggest problems in the United States, but individuals can do many things to help end it.

Rowan said one way people can help is by educating themselves more about other people.

"We have to know about the past," she said. "We can't know the future without knowing the past. We also have to encourage children to be open to other people."

Two opportunities are available on campus for students to expand their knowledge.

The African American History Showcase will be Thursday, Feb. 18, at 7 p.m. in Legends. It will consist of biographies of civil rights activists, a tribute to the late Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall, children's literature, poems and a skit. The evening will provide insight and introduction to the history of African American leaders.

Diversity Through Entertainment will be held Sunday from noon-6 p.m. at the University of Iowa. Transportation will be provided. Interested students should contact Rowan at 8434.

Weekend set aside for siblings, friends

BY SARAH WOODARD

Brother/Sister/Friend Weekend provides an opportunity for siblings and friends to spend a fun and exciting weekend at Wartburg Feb. 19-21.

"The purpose of the weekend is to allow siblings and friends to see the college and become involved with the campus," said Christina Long, '94, special events committee chairperson.

Registration is Friday, Feb. 19, from 6-8 p.m. in the Visitors Center. Siblings and friends can pick up a free pass from the Admissions Office to eat in the cafeteria sometime during the weekend and a pass to the basketball games Friday evening. Following the men's basketball game, comedian Buzz Sutherland will perform in Legends.

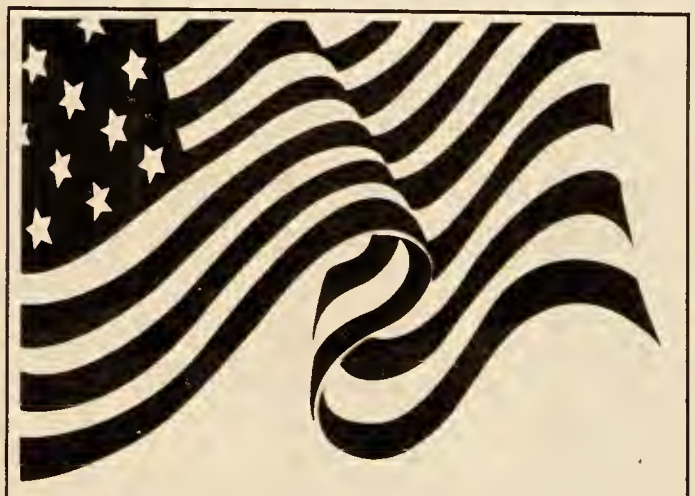
Saturday's activities begin at 9 a.m. in the Centennial Complex. The Annual Bob Vogel Indoor Golf Classic will be held in the hallways of Hebron, Centennial and Vollmer Halls. Everyone is welcome to participate.

From 10 a.m. to noon there will be shirt and boxer short painting and games. A site has not yet been determined.

The rest of Saturday's activities will take place in Legends. The film "Fern Gully" will be shown at 2 p.m., followed by inspirational speaker Sean McMillian, who is being sponsored by Campus Ministry Board. A dance from 9 p.m. to midnight will have a Mardi Gras theme. Prizes and refreshments will be available.

Long said the special events committee tried to provide a variety of events for all ages to enjoy.

Wartburg students knowing how many guests they will have are asked to sign up at the Information Desk to help the college prepare for the weekend.



Campus ministry plans to 'build on the rock'

BY MICHAEL PEASLEY

Spiritual Emphasis Week, Feb. 20-27, offers students many opportunities to reflect on their spirituality, according to Karn Severson, '95, chairperson of the event. This year's theme is "Building On The Rock."

Sean McMillian will begin Spiritual Emphasis Week Saturday, Feb. 20, when he speaks at 4 p.m. in Legends. McMillian was keynote speaker at the 1990 National Lutheran Youth Gathering in Dallas, TX.

"We feel very fortunate to have McMillian on campus," said the Rev. Larry Trachte, campus pastor, "because he only does these types of things twice a semester."

Another activity will be Kirchentag, "Day of the Church." All the faith expression groups will perform skits. In past years a dinner was served, but this year desserts will be served instead.

Other activities planned during the week are the Graven Award presentation, an international panel discussing spirituality and an Ash Wednesday Service Feb. 24, with President Robert Vogel preaching.

Ninety-seven percent employed, attend grad school

Graduate placement near perfect again

Despite one of the tightest job markets in recent memory, Wartburg College's class of 1992 attained 97 percent placement within seven months of graduation, according to a survey conducted by the college's Career Development Center.

This marked the sixth consecutive year that placement percentage reached or exceeded 97 percent.

Placement is defined as employment of at least 20 hours a week or more; further study through a graduate, professional or continuing education program; or a definite decision not to seek employment or further education.

Once the initial information was obtained from the 263 graduates, a second questionnaire requesting additional information was sent. Of these, 159 responses were received.

Will Smith, director of the Career Development Center, said this follow-up questionnaire provided some revealing statistics concerning job satisfaction, entry-level wages, effort required to secure a job and the relationship of job to study at Wartburg.

Smith said one of the most significant responses came regarding job satisfaction. More than 80 percent said they were satisfied with their present job, and 86 percent said the jobs were related to either their first, second or both major fields of study.

Smith also noted that 45 percent of the graduates wrote 10 or fewer letters before securing employment.

"That's significant because it proves many jobs come about because of who you know," Smith said. "Our graduates are doing a much better job of networking with our alumni."

There was an improvement in entry-level compensation for most graduates. More than 75 percent attained jobs that paid $10,000 or above, while only 12 percent were under that figure—an improvement of 7 percent over the year before. The remainder did not respond to that question.

Smith believes there are a number of reasons for this better than expected report.

"I think our graduates feel pretty good about themselves when they leave the college," he said. "They have confidence in themselves, so they do a better job of selling themselves to potential employers."

"Our students also are getting the message that they need to be aggressive and to start earlier in the job search," Smith said. "In addition to connecting with alumni, those students who have gone through an internship appear to have a better chance of landing a permanent job."

The 1992 class totaled 263 students, of which 148 have acquired full or part-time positions in business, industry or social science; 58 have acquired positions as educators and 50 have elected to continue their education.

Three graduates remained unemployed and four others could not be reached for placement information.

Jackson: people can make a difference

BY JAMES D. MILLER

"We, the people, must provide the backbone in politics and do something about current conditions," said Jesse Jackson Jr. at convocation Tuesday. "As students, we can make a difference."

Jackson, a political and human rights reformer, is the youngest appointed member of the Democratic National Committee. He is currently working with the Rainbow Coalition for equality in sports.

In recognition of Black History Month, Jackson went through some of the highlights and downfalls of African Americans' struggles to gain equality. He pointed out many people who have had a tremendous impact on this battle, from Rosa Parks to Arthur Ashe.

Jackson, at a press conference after the convocation, pointed out what we as Americans should have as our top priorities.

"First and foremost, we should reinvest in our country and our education system," he said. "We have money that would be better used at home on education."

According to Jackson, in the $80 billion sports industry, blacks are not being treated fairly. We as taxpayers pay for sports teams, he said, so we should make the difference and strive for change.

Jackson showed great admiration for Wartburg's own Jerome Rowan who has been asked by the Rev. Jesse Jackson to serve as a spokesperson on a task force that explores racism in athletics.

Through this task force, Rowan and Jackson will try to break down the lines of race and and promote equality through out the sports world.

KWAR gives students variety

BY DAVID SCHOFIELD

What radio station plays music varying from Garth Brooks to Metallica?

KWAR, Wartburg's very own station, does just that during its on-air hours from 7 a.m. to 2 a.m. daily.

Many KWAR disc jockeys play every kind of music imaginable. Anyone may call the station at 8306 and request a song they want to hear.

In addition to a wide variety of music, the station also hosts talk shows and informational shows. Some of these shows are Weekly Eclipse, the Intellectual Hour, Dr. Vinnie, Ask the Administration, Wartburg Issues, Eye On Sports and the Sunday Worship Service.

Development office more than fundraiser

BY ANDREA FLATER

The Development and Advancement Department does more for Wartburg College than just fundraising.

Institutional development helps to interpret and tell the story of Wartburg College to alumni, parents, friends and supporters. This is done to tell them about the programs and activities that are happening at Wartburg, including such programs as the Decade of Opportunity.

"The Decade of Opportunity is a long range plan for Wartburg College that was developed in 1988," said Rick Torgerson, vice president for advancement.

The long range plan lays out the mission, vision, programs and services of Wartburg College. Raising funds for the Wavering chapel is part of the long term plan.

The Development and Advancement Department depends heavily on the help of its staff and volunteers to meet its goals.

Tree cutting raises uproar in Waverly

BY JOY JURRIES

Waverly residents driving by the Bremer County Courthouse last Saturday morning saw a lawn full of logs and debris after the Norton Tree Service of Clarksville cut down nine trees.

Cutting down the trees started the controversy over good management or bad judgment, according to the Waverly newspaper.

Supervisors and groundskeepers told a concerned public Sunday, Feb. 7, that plans to cut down the trees had been in the works since 1987 as part of the ongoing management process.

"Both the landscaper and tree trimmer warned that removal of the damaged and unsafe trees was necessary," said David Busch, Waverly area supervisor.

Waverly residents questioned the wisdom of the decision by asking why organizations and the community were not contacted and why all the trees had to be cut. The questions drew little response.

"Many of the trees were held together with cement or were cracked down the middle," said Jim Norton, a tree cutter. "I believe this removal will also make room for a pleasing new landscape for the courthouse."

This tree-cutting uproar is not the first for Waverly. A fundraiser was held to leave a 100-year-old tree standing on the grounds before the building of the Civic Center.

AMA, food service survey brings changes

Food service spices up menu

BY BRAD WALLER

So you're sick and tired of the same old food in the cafeteria. You say there needs to be some changes—immediately! Well, did you know Wartburg's Food Service is in the process of changing, even as you read this article?

Yes, it's true. Thanks to a survey put out in coordination with the American Marketing Association, food service has been able to pin-point the strengths and weaknesses of the cafeteria.

In early December, AMA approached 400 Wartburg students with a marketing research survey aimed at the cafeteria. Of the 400 students, some 373 responded. Females accounted for 61 percent and males 39 percent.

The survey covered these specific areas: grill, salad bar, deli, main entrees, sack lunches and sanitation. All food categories were based on variety, freshness, flavor and appearance. Each one was then rated on a scale of one to five, with one being unsatisfactory, three being neutral and five being satisfactory.

Results please Juhl and Thiner

Don Juhl, director of food service and the Student Union, was excited with the overall success of the survey's results.

"I was very pleased with the representation we had, and the positive responses reflected the actual results," Juhl said. "The deli fared well, as did the salad bar and sack lunches. The conclusion we had from students on the main entrees was we needed to make some changes as far as variety."

Heidi Thiner, student employment supervisor/special events coordinator, agreed with Juhl's overall perception of the survey.

"The results we got back were positive for the most part," Thiner said. "I was surprised at the many suggestions students gave back. The cafeteria did make menu changes as early as Christmas break."

Because students' appetites can be so finicky, the role of the cafeteria to provide students with healthy, yet desirable foods, becomes difficult.

"We have a dual-role to play," Juhl said. "We attempt to satisfy students with meals they enjoy and still provide a balance of nutrition."

Main entrees focus of change

As much as students may moan and complain about how cafeteria food stinks, the proof lies—as they say—in the pudding. Each category, with the exception of main entrees, was clearly given satisfactory approval for overall quality.

The reason the main entrees were not as successful as other food choices remains the focus of food service. Many students expressed the need for changes with international and vegetarian menus.

When asked if more international menu items should be offered as main entrees, 51 percent of the respondants said yes and 49 percent said no. When asked if more meatless entrees should be served 41 percent said yes and 59 percent said no.

Juhl explained the steps food service is taking to accommodate these students.

"By May Term, we hope to introduce several new pastas, either in a pasta bar or in the entree line," Juhl said. "There would be several different meatless toppings ranging from tomato sauces to various cheeses and the students can do their own creating."

"Our main goal is to appeal to international students and those who are vegetarians. But we also hope to give traditional students something different," Juhl said.

Juhl also explained the pull back of brats, hot dogs and cheddarwurst on the grill. They are going with more hamburgers and vegetable patties.

Student comments count

One way food service is hoping to get students more excited about the cafeteria is with an upcoming recipe contest.

"Our plans are to have students bring back family recipes after break and put them into our food program to be tested on a trial basis," Thiner said. "The winning recipe will be named after the winner and put into the food schedule. There may possibly be a small reward."

Thiner also emphasized the satisfaction students had with the cleanliness of the cafeteria. There were 300 students who rated the cafeteria's cleanliness either a four or a five—a statistic that should make cafeteria workers hold their heads high.

"We want students to know their suggestions get taken seriously, and any person with an idea should not hesitate to put it into the suggestion box," Thiner said.

The box is located on the wall near the tray line.

Complete survey results are open to the public. Anyone interested in seeing the results should contact the food service office.

Wartburg offers rare opportunity that often gets missed

Minority Student Programs has done a wonderful job coordinating events to commerate Black History Month. It is too bad more students do not take advantage of the learning opportunities they offer.

Attendance at the Bernice King and Jesse Jackson Jr. convocations was excellent. Many students have been impressed with the caliber of speakers coming to Wartburg lately, and rightfully so. Although their messages were convincing, most who attended were simply inspired by the presence of the two on the Neumann Auditorium stage.

Since education is one of the most effective tools we have to end some of the problems in the world, why does it take famous speakers to convince people at Wartburg to educate themselves about African Americans?

There are many opportunities to educate oneself about other cultures at Wartburg without spending a lot of time or money. These chances will not be as abundant nor will students suddenly find the time to broaden their "cultural knowledge" after leaving here.

We challenge everyone to attend the African American History Showcase Thursday at 7 p.m. in Legends. Last year's show was both educational and emotionally moving. The participants put a lot of time and heart into the night, but presented to a crowd of less than 20 students, faculty and staff.

To those who accept this challenge, we guarantee you will not come away empty-handed. To those who don't, we guarantee you will miss out on a wonderful opportunity to expand your "cultural knowledge."

Life is a Beatlefest

It's All Too Much

Andrew Howie

For the past two years, I have participated in the annual tradition of Beatlefest. Three days of hanging around in Chicago's O'Hare Hyatt Regency, congregating with incredible people and listening to the music that brought us all together is an experience I have grown to love.

We arrive from all over the country for an August weekend to share in the fun, the idolatry and the love of rock and roll's greatest band, The Beatles. The six of us, recognized by our peers as "Beatlemaniacs," cram into a car and drive 300 miles to spend three nights in a hotel room meant for two. Half of the fun is listening to Beatle tunes the whole ride. But the real party starts when we arrive.

A smile erupts on my face whenever I think of those weekends. Just imagine—two days and three nights carousing with hundreds of other Beatles fans, swapping stories, favorite tunes and bootlegged songtracks. Congregating in the cubbyhole underneath the main staircase until 2 a.m. singing along with a fan who learned all of the Beatles' tunes on his guitar. Watching videos from their first appearance on "Ed Sullivan" to Lennon's last TV interview. To describe it as "awesome" would be a grand understatement.

I became a Beatles fan during my first year at Wartburg. Since I came to realize that John, Paul, George and Ringo are the 20th century's equivalent of Mozart and Beethoven, I have been collecting their music. Their work represents music in its most creative and influential sense. Their music was and still is considered to be revolutionary because of the concepts they employed to express their message.

Many of the intricacies we take for granted with today's recording artists were never considered before the Beatles. They influenced not only how music sounded, but how it looked and how it was made. To quote an anonymous Beatles fan, "Nowadays, there are only two types of bands—those who were influenced by the Beatles and liars."

Life truly is a Beatlefest because their music can fit every mood and every situation. Whenever I need to be cheered up I reach for Paul's "Good Day Sunshine," "Yellow Submarine," "Blackbird," "Hey, Jude" or "Can't Buy Me Love." Or if I'm in a rocking judgmental type of mood John is always there with "I Am the Walrus," "Revolution," "Happiness is a Warm Gun," "Being for the Benefit of Mr. Kite" or "I Feel Fine." George contributes with "Here Comes the Sun" and "Something," and even Ringo showed his talent with "Octopus' Garden."

The Beatles will live forever in music. In the 60s, John wrote a theme for the generation with "All You Need Is Love" and "Give Peace a Chance." Paul's immortal contribution was summed up in the lyrics, "And in the end, the love you take is equal to the love you make."

Even though I have heard most of their songs hundreds of times over, I never get tired of them. They pick me up when I'm feeling down. And they remind me never to take things for granted.

I can't imagine a day in my life without the Beatles. Thanks, guys.

Steffen faces 'awesome' classroom challenge

Bromwell Elementary students range from those who have travelled to 13 different foreign countries to those who may not have been much farther than Denver, CO—and this is just part of the picture depicting the range of experiences and abilities at the elementary school where I am student teaching.

Bromwell Elementary is located in an affluent neighborhood. Many of the students from this neighborhood are actively involved in extracurricular activities such as soccer, ballet, ice skating, choir and many more. Most of their homes are extravagant, to say the least. Moreover, these students have had the opportunity to travel abroad; go to plays, museums and major sporting events, and, of course, take advantage of the nearby slopes.

The students that are bussed in from the two "satellite" areas are mostly African American. These students have a different background, in that they often have not had the opportunity to travel, ski or go to museums and plays. Their families struggle to make ends meet. In most cases both parents work long hours or are going back to school. In addition, these students live in "tougher" neighborhoods. These things combined result in many distractions at home and the lack of the much-needed time spent with the children. All things considered, the students in my fourth and fifth grade combination class are bright and capable.

The potential in this classroom is quite awesome. The task of meeting the needs of each and every one of them is both difficult and challenging. I plan to meet the challenge head on. It is so exciting to see a child succeed that I believe it would be a crime if the opportunities were not provided for them to do so.

Not only have there been challenges in the classroom, but also those of budgeting time and money, and of driving. I am proud to say that I have conquered the challenge of driving in Denver. To be honest, I was quite nervous just thinking about the experience. The extent of my urban driving before coming out here was probably Cedar Rapids—not something to brag about. However, it didn't take long to become comfortable with Denver traffic. Even rush hour isn't too bad. Now I just go with the flow.

Wartburg West has been a great learning experience so far, and there is so much to do before it is over.

I look forward to seeing everyone in May Term.

Valentine's for everyone

Food for Thought

Paul Everding

A friend of mine was telling me last week that every Valentine's Day she dressed in black because when she was in high school she never had any reason to celebrate the day.

Neither did I, but that doesn't mean I dressed in black.

Valentine's Day has meant a lot to me these past three years. Maybe it's because I have had a girlfriend for each of those past three Valentine days. But you don't need to have a special someone or a spouse waiting for you to make the day special. All you need are people to care for.

Valentine's Day isn't about romance. It's about love.

Now before you say the day is exclusively a couples scene, think about all those valentines you have received over the years. Did all of them come from sweethearts? Why do you suppose that was?

Valentine's Day is about caring for the people around you. It's letting someone know they're special because they are who they are—an unconditional positive stroke.

Sure, it's not the same without a significant other. But sending a cheap piece of paper with a heart that says "Be Mine" to someone feeling dejected and alone means more than a bouquet of roses does any day.

And you don't have to be with your boyfriend or girlfriend to enjoy the day. Just ask me. My girlfriend went to Nashville, TN.

So Valentine's day is not an exclusive couples scene. It's a time for letting others know you care about them. It's every day of the year.

Symphony celebrates romance, new logo

BY JEN AMOS

"Lush" is the term Janice Wade, assistant professor of music, used to describe the music performed at Sunday's concert by the Wartburg Community Symphony.

The Valentine concert entitled "Let's Celebrate Romance" entailed music with romantic themes. Concert-goers were not disappointed by the symphony's excellent performance and were treated to two rare bassoon solos by David Rachor, guest soloist.

Rachor has been a faculty member at UNI since 1989. Before 1989, he taught at Tennessee Technical University where he also was a member of the Cumberland Quintet. The quintet played a Carnegie Hall recital in 1985.

The fist number, "Adagio for Strings, Op. 11" by Barber required only the string instruments. This was a delight to listen to.

"Let's Celebrate Romance" was the symphony's fourth performance this year. The symphony is celebrating its 40th year.

A reception followed the concert in the Fine Arts Center lobby. Two student string quintets provided mood music and a new symphony logo by Waverly graphic artist Dan Hatala was unveiled.

Hatala's design was was the winning entry in a contest organized by the Symphony Board. The judging panel consisted of John Quirk, art instructor at Wartburg College, Waverly artist Glen Swanson and University of Northern Iowa artist Deborah Zolotsky.

The next and final concert of the season is Sunday, April 3, entitled "Let's Celebrate Community." The symphony and a community chorus will perform the Easter portion of Handel's "Messiah."

THE SOUNDS OF ROMANCE—The Wartburg Community Symphony presented their Valentine concert Sunday afternoon in Neumann Auditorium. It was the fourth concert in the symphony's 40th year anniversary season.

Organist Robert Clark, professor of organ at Arizona State University, will present a concert and conduct an organ workshop at Wartburg College Friday and Saturday, Feb. 19 and 20.

The concert will be held at 8 p.m. Friday in Neumann Auditorium and is co-sponsored by Wartburg and the Waterloo Chapter of the American Guild of Organists. The workshop will also be held in Neumann Auditorium the following morning from 10 a.m. to noon. Both are open to the public free of charge.

The concert program Friday includes "Concerto II in D Major" by Giuseppe Tartini and Leonhard Frischmuth, "Trio Sonata No. 4 in E minor, BWV 528" and "Tocatta in E Major, BWV 566" by Johann Sebastian Bach and "Prelude, Fugue and Variation, Op 18" by Cesar Franck.

Clark serves on the Board of Directors for the American Organ Academy and has taught at Arizona State since 1981. In 1982 he was on the international jury for the most prestigious of international organ competitions, the Grand Prix de Chartres.

A concert organist and frequent presenter at music conventions, Clark is co-editor of the Concordia edition of Bach's "Orgelbuchlein," on which he will base his Saturday workshop.

Knights suffer from 10-day lay-off; men split two

BY JAMES D. MILLER

The Wartburg men's basketball team came out of the weekend with a win and a loss. They lost in a nail bitter to Central 66-65 and then traveled to Decorah to beat arch-rival Luther 79-61.

The Knights had to play without Coach Buzz Levick who couldn't attend Friday's game due to health reasons.

"The fact that Coach Levick wasn't there may have affected us," guard Doug Hall said. "Another thing was that we hadn't played for 10 days and lacked some intensity."

From the tip-off it was anyone's ball game with both teams exchanging baskets for most of the game.

Wartburg led by four when Central's Brent Vander Waal nailed a three pointer to bring it within one with 1:24 left on the clock. The Knights fouled with six seconds left and Woody Klyn made both free throws to give Central the win.

Rob Kain led all scorers and rebounders with 13 points and eight boards. Brain Farrell and Hall had 12 points apiece while Matt Leary and Jeff Isaacson were both good for eight points.

The Knights traveled to Luther on Saturday and came back with a big victory. Wartburg shot 56 percent from the field in the first half to take a 19 point lead at halftime. Wartburg held onto that lead throughout the second half to bring home the win.

Leary was game high with 18 points and Kain had 13. Leary and Kain shared the lead in rebounding, pulling down eight apiece. Hall put in 15 points and Farrell and Isaacson had nine points each.

The Knights stay home this weekend and play William Penn Friday and Loras Saturday.

It's time for Iowa Conference to make a change

The Fan's Perspective

Tim Seeger

I overheard some people saying after Friday night's basketball games that Wartburg is a sexist school.

They mentioned that during basketball season the pep band usually only plays for the men's game and not the women's game. They also said that the concession stand sometimes won't open until the men's game.

That got me to thinking — well let's not just blame the pep band and concession stand. How about the pom pons? They usually only perform at the men's game. And how about all the fans? Many of them only come for the men's game and catch only the very end of the women's game.

I suppose the list could go on and on.

But I really don't think it's the Wartburg community that's being "sexist."

The women's game always starts at 6 p.m., and the men's game begins at 8 p.m. That's a total of fours hours worth of basketball.

That's a lot of basketball, especially when you have to sit on those bleachers that entire time.

So have you ever wondered why the women's game is always first? It's not Wartburg's fault. The ones to blame are those people that do the scheduling for the conference.

It's obvious that the featured game is traditionally the last game. It's like that in most sports — you want to save the best until last.

But is that really the case anymore? Is the men's game really any more exciting than the women's?

Both games can be equally up-tempo, and both men and women seem to be able to shoot equally well. The only real difference is that dunks in women's basketball are kind of hard to find.

But the ability to dunk is not that big of an added feature.

I propose that the Iowa Conference does what my high school conference back home has done. Back home the girls typically played Thursday nights, while the boys played Friday. Obviously Friday was the ideal night to have your basketball games.

Several years ago, in an effort to make scheduling more fair, the Rock Valley Conference decided to change the schedule around a few times a season, so that the girls and boys will both have the opportunity to play on the "ideal" Friday night.

Maybe it's time for a change in the Iowa Conference to give both the men and women equal opportunities.

Lady Knights display their best, their worst

BY TIM SEEGER

After playing virtually flawless ball against conference leader Central Friday, Wartburg's women's basketball team played dismally against Luther Saturday.

Coach Monica Severson said she was pleased with Wartburg's defense and rebounding Friday, but she was really disappointed Saturday.

"We weren't really ready to play Saturday," she said, "which is surprising since it was against Luther."

In Wartburg's 64-58 home win against Central, the Lady Knights committed only 12 turnovers, while Central had 28. Wartburg had three players in double figures and shot 48 percent from the field.

But at Luther Saturday night, Wartburg shot only 27 percent in the second half was outrebounded 39-19.

Wartburg was looking for revenge against Central after losing to them earlier in the season 83-64. In that game Central shot 65 percent from the field, while Wartburg shot only 33 percent.

Friday night, Kathy Roberts' four-foot shot with nine minutes in the first half gave Wartburg the lead for good at 17-15, but the game was close all the way.

Roberts led the Knights with 15 points, seven rebounds and nine assists. Carrie Peterson added 13 points, and Angie Toale had 12.

Dawn Keller injured her knee in Friday night's game as she went up for a lay-up. Keller said that doctors do not yet know what was injured, but it could be stretched ligaments.

At Luther Saturday night, Luther jumped out to a 10-0 lead; Wartburg crawled back into it and was down 31-30 at halftime.

But Luther again took a hefty lead at the beginning of the second half.

"We had to play catch-up the whole second half," Severson said. "Anytime you get behind you end up hurrying your shots, and we're not a great catch-up team."

Wartburg was led by Kathy Roberts with 20 points.

Wartburg and Central both have only two losses, but Central only has three games left, while Wartburg has five.

Wartburg has four of its last five games at home. They play at home against William Penn Friday and Loras Saturday.

"Loras is a real up-and-down team," Severson said. "We really can't afford to lose another game."

"Although we have four of our last five at home, we still have a tougher schedule than Central," Severson said. "I don't see Central losing any more games."

Wrestlers finish dual season at perfect 18-0

All went according to plan for Wartburg's wrestling team Thursday night. The Knights defeated the Upper Iowa Peacocks 42-4 in Knights Gymnasium.

All the wrestlers who were favored going into the match came out victors.

The lone Upper Iowa winner was Tyrone Fambro. Fambro is now 32-4 overall and he was the number one wrestler in the Iowa Conference last year at his weight. He defeated Wartburg's Chris Ristau 18-9.

The victory solidified Wartburg's perfect dual record at 18-0. Upper Iowa's record fell to 4-8.

These two teams will again compete at the Iowa Conference Tourney Saturday in Indianola. Wrestling begins at 10 a.m.

Seniors honored

Since it was the last home wrestling meet of the season, Wartburg's five seniors were honored before the meet. Those mentioned were Troy Meinhard, Brad Tholen, Tom Hogan, Lance Christenson and Jon Dawley.

Coach Jim Miller said that although Meinhard has not seen much wrestling action this year, he has been an important contributor in practice. Meinhard was gone all of last year studying abroad in Germany, and he carries a 3.9+ grade-point average.

Brad Tholen has placed in every tournament this year and has improved his career record to 57-42.

Tom Hogan, a two-year captain of the squad, is ranked number one in the nation at 150 pounds and has a career record of 106-19-1.

Lance Christenson, also a two-year captain, is also ranked number one in the nation at 167 pounds. His career record stands at 103-49-2.

Jon Dawley is ranked second in the nation at 190 pounds, and his career record is 108-11-3.

No, it's not an erector set kingdom. It's the catwalk backstage in Players' Theatre. This hazardous area is cluttered with props from past shows and haunted by the ghost of the theatre.

Probably one of the least known places on campus is the Physical Education Annex, located on 11th Street across from Engelbrecht Library. Ed Knupp, head soccer coach, has his office located there.
